

80% generally in favour

More than 1,100 pool-user surveys received

BY LAUREEN SWEENEY

More than 1,100 residents had participated in the city's pool-user survey, according to the city's reported number of submissions received by August 4.

While the number was expected to change before the deadline Sunday, August 6, "Most of those returned – some 80 percent – generally favoured the desire and need for an indoor pool," said Mayor Christina Smith.

While other results would take more time to tabulate, she said the city's next step would likely be to examine what indoor pool facilities already exist in or around Westmount. A number of apartment buildings, for example, are known to have private pools.

The indoor pool survey consisted of a letter of explanation sent to all households in the city. In total, 10,000 letters providing a personal identification number (PIN) were distributed, city director general Mike Deegan said.

The PINs were required to validate internet or hard copy submissions.

"The findings from this research will have a direct impact upon the city's decision-making continued on p. 15

Gallery, Matossian: next generation of councillors?

BY LAUREEN SWEENEY

The two latest Westmounters announcing their intention to seek a council seat are truly the "next generation."

Both are following in the footsteps of their fathers.

Mary Gallery for District 6 (being vacated by Councillor Nicole Forbes) is the daughter of Brian Gallery, who served on city council as an alderman from 1975 to 1983 and then as mayor through 1987.

Christian Matossian, son of Nicolas Matossian – a councillor from 1991 to 2001 – intends to run for the seat in District 5. This has been vacant since the acclamation of Christina Smith as interim mayor in April.

While both new candidates live in District 4, "we don't want to oppose Councillor [Rosalind] Davis," Matossian explained. Both are the only declared candidates in their respective districts and support Smith's bid for the mayoralty against Suburban editor Beryl Wajzman.

See p. 8 for substantive coverage of Gallery and Matossian's announcements.

Developer meets with neighbours

Council postpones Claremont vote again – to Sept.

BY LAUREEN SWEENEY

It now appears that preliminary city council approval of the apartment development project for 500 Claremont at Windsor will have to wait until the September 5 meeting, Mayor Christina Smith said last week.

Neighbourhood opponents, along with developer Gideon Pollack, had been expecting a council vote August 7 after a postponement in July in a complicated referendum process for such projects that do not conform to current zoning.

Smith told the Independent, however, that revisions to the original plans would only be viewed and discussed by council members in their closed-door general committee session August 7, after press time.

It has already been announced that council was prepared to allow the project to proceed through the process (see story March 14, p. 6).

Smith said she expected, however, that the project would quickly proceed to a second public consultation meeting after the September council meeting.

The project has been under review between the city's Planning Advisory Committee and the developer since it was first presented in December.

It proposes converting the 1908 institutional building into 16 or 17 apartments, adding a recessed penthouse as a fifth storey and an extension to the south.

Revisions presented

Modifications to the south extension were presented at a public onsite neighbourhood meeting held by the developer July 20.

"There was a very healthy back-and-forth," Pollack said of his event, which was described as attracting more than 30 people during the evening, which lasted well over two hours.

"It was an excellent meeting," acknowledged Frank Philpott, of Claremont, one of those spearheading the opposition. "Hats off to Pollack."

But despite modifications, he said, he still remains convinced the project is "too big, too high and its parking access off Claremont too dangerous." He also acknowledged that "great improvements" had been made to the exterior look of the building by the modifications.

This had been achieved by replacing much of the window glazing on the extension with red brick to match that on the original structure. "It now looks like a unified building," Philpott said.

Pollack said there had been no change to density since the first view in December. "Everything, with the exception to reducing the size of balconies, was cosmetic."

Smith said that since the developer's meeting, council members had been receiving many emails from residents of the area expressing similar concerns as Philpott over the plan. A petition of more than 130 nearby residents had been presented to council July 4 (see story July 11, p. 1).

Claremont resident Kirk Polymenakos told the Independent that many at the meeting voiced concern about possible damage from excavation work.

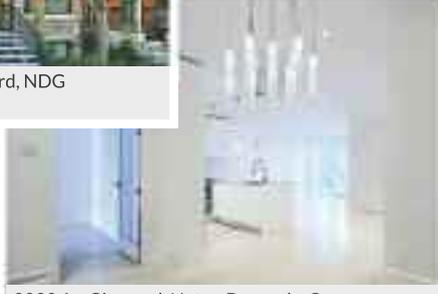

This original rendering in December from the firm of Vezina Architects shows the proposed addition along Claremont with extensive glazing.

A revised rendering from Vezina shows a narrower addition and increased use of red brick.

CITY NEEDS TO STEP UP
SANCTIONS ON WAYWARD
DOG OWNERS

As a resident of Hillside Ave., dog owner of a Labrador retriever and genuine dog lover, I was shocked to hear of the circumstances surrounding the death of Dean-O! and more so by the details of how he was attacked.

My condolences to Christine Downs.

Almost every day Ms. Downs would walk little Dean-O! on Hillside and though senior, he seemed to enjoy his walks.

What a tragic death.

The fact remains that dog owners are fully responsible for the actions of their dogs, and the owner of [the attacking] dog is no exception.

At the field at the Westmount Athletic Grounds, many owners ignore regulations and allow their dogs to run loose on the field. This needs to stop, and fines need to be levied to discourage this practice.

While the dog who attacked Dean-O! is a Staffordshire terrier, the breed is not relevant. The dog should have been on a leash, period.

I hope the city of Westmount will consider higher fines, step up surveillance and ensure dog owners respect the law.

BRIGITTE ADES, HILLSIDE AVE.

AN 'OUTSIDER' WEIGHS IN

Regarding Denis Biro's letter "Wajzman is 'out of touch'" (July 11, p. 6), I am one of the non-residents that brought up bilingual safety signs with former mayor Peter Trent.

About a year ago [former] mayor Trent emailed Public Works (Patrick Raggo) and asked him to order the safety signs. They were supposed to go up months ago. Quite frankly, I doubt that any were ordered as both Public Works and Mayor Christina Smith have not had the courtesy of responding to my emails.

Next, there is the matter of the Office québécois de la langue française (OQLF) making a mistake* years ago that cost Westmount thousands of dollars ($75,000 including interest). While Westmount charged me 38 cents for the document that illustrated the above, Mayor Smith has ignored my request that Westmount ask the OQLF for the $75,000, as why should Westmount taxpayers pay for the mistake of the OQLF?

For years Hampstead lawyer Harold Staviss, whose office is in Westmount, strongly encouraged Mayor Trent to post bilingual signs throughout Westmount. In the end, Trent admitted that Staviss was correct in pressing the issue.

Next was the matter of the Tour de l'Île de Montréal. Some cities have banned the event until the participants are invited to raise money for the charities of their choice. No reply from Mayor Smith. When I asked New York City mayor Michael Bloomberg to do the same with an NYC event, lo and behold, the NYC event began to cooperate with charity and now the organizers are very happy to say that they raise $1 million a year.

There seems to be from some Westmount quarters, what is viewed as the interference of outsiders in the affairs of Westmount. Will they continue to complain when the roads of Westmount are safer, when Westmount is $75,000 richer and the Tour de l'Île raises $1 million a year for charities?

There was a time not too long ago when municipal politicians swore an oath "to do fully what is in the best interest of the public, to the best of my ability."

From what I can see, when that oath stopped, the citizens of Westmount ended up with Mayor Smith!

MURRAY LEVINE, DORVAL

* Editor's notes: In a May 10, 2016 article, we report on former mayor Peter Trent saying "The decision to phase in bilingual parking signs, he said, follows an April 19 letter to the city from the Office Québécois de la langue française (OQLF) 're-interpreting' its longtime position against them ... The law itself had not changed, however, Trent said." (p. 1 – emphasis added.)

 "Pressing the issue" may not be a correct interpretation of Trent's position. In the same story referenced above (p. 4), we reported on Trent responding to Harold Staviss in the May 2 council meeting question period as saying "Earlier Trent had said the priority of the city's Public Works department was the reconstruction of roads, water mains and sewers. It had 'other things to do than mess about with parking signs.'"

 The oath sworn by members of the current council (to fulfill their duties of office "with honesty and justice, in accordance with the law and with the Code of Ethics and Conduct of the Elected Municipal Officers of the city of Westmount and undertake to observe the rules of that code applicable to me after my term has ended") was set by the province of Quebec.

At least three members of this council (Victor Drury, Nicole Forbes and now-former member previous mayor Peter Trent) also promised to perform their duties "without partiality, fear, favour, or affection and in the best interest of the city and its citizens." (See "Mayor predicts fewer brickbats," October 15, 2013, p. 8). – KM

Ducks move into pool, temporarily

Diana Anderson of Côte St. Antoine Rd. wrote, of the photo at left: "I was at Westmount pool July 26 and saw that we were sharing the swimming lanes with some ducks from Westmount Park! They swam in the lanes and took some naps on the side of the pool! A neat and rare event I think. The lifeguards were working hard to help and ensure all were accommodated (both ducks and people!). I am not sure about the rest of the story and how the ducks got back to the Westmount Park pond from the pool, but when I went by [later on], they were back at home. Leah Trineer of Lansdowne Ave. wrote, of the photo at right: "The ducks showed up down at the pool when the pond in the park had been emptied for cleaning. They spent the night at the pool [July 25] and were even there the next morning when the Westmount Dolphins were practising. [Pictured above] is my daughter, Hannah Trineer-Roberts, who is assistant pool manager/lifeguard and co-head coach of the Dolphins. She was on duty the evening that they showed up.

New 'shaggy dog' takes up home in Westmount Park

BY LAUREEN SWEENEY

A new brown dog has taken up residence in Westmount Park, unleashed and sitting some six feet high in front of the dog run.

It's not exactly a "shaggy dog story," but the newcomer resembles a shaggy dog; one created by the city's greenhouse staff in the form of mosaiculture – the process of creating designs out of shrubs, plants and flowers.

The idea originated with the greenhouse team headed by Mélanie Banninger and was created by Banninger, Hélène Bazinet and Christine Dupuis, according to Nicolas Mory, the city's superintendent of arboriculture and horticulture.

The team used the steel framework of a generic dog, covered it with mesh through which they inserted grasses into a soil mix. A hose inside keeps the grasses watered.

The new dog "inhabits" the island at the west entrance to the park off de Maison-neuve at Lansdowne that leads to the dog run.

And no, it has no name – at least not yet, Mory said.

Two varieties of grass were used, explains Councillor Cynthia Lulham, commissioner of Sustainability and Parks. A shorter grass was used for the face and a longer one for the coat, "which is getting longer now," she said. "It's at its peak for growth."

The plan is to add a mosaiculture heron to the pond next year, she explained.

Since the city greenhouses are now closed awaiting restoration, the gardeners are looking after the flower beds in Westmount Park. The city continues to contract out maintenance of the grass, trees and shrubs. See p. 1 for photo.

Excavator gets tickets for $712

An excavating contractor on Surrey Gardens was issued two tickets in three days apart for failing to observe city regulations, Public Security officials said. The tickets totalled $712.

The first one followed a warning at 10:30 am July 22 about the use of heavy equipment on a Saturday. When he was found still at work at 1:35 pm, a ticket was issued for $271. When he failed to adhere to another warning to remove equipment and piles of construction material from the street, he was issued a second ticket July 25 for $441.

Gallery, Matossian outline priorities, community background

BY LAUREEN SWEENEY

Mary Gallery, District 6

In running for city council in District 6, Mary Gallery has already identified the over-population of École St. Léon and the revitalization of Greene Ave. as priorities. On a city-wide basis, she lists streamlining the Urban Planning permit process and improvement of infrastructure.

"It's an exciting time in Westmount," she said, suggesting "the renewal of city council with a younger team committed to continuing the legacy of [former mayor] Peter Trent."

When Trent said, on his resignation as mayor last April, that it was time for a "younger generation" to step up and serve, she points out how she has "inherited" that challenge. Not only was her father, Brian Gallery, a former mayor of Westmount, but community service has been a family tradition. Her great-great grandfather, Sir William Hingston, was mayor of Montreal (1875-1877) and his son, surgeon Donald Hingston, was founder of St.

Mary Gallery on Victoria Ave. August 1.

Mary's Hospital.

Gallery is now maintaining the link with the hospital as a member of the foundation's fundraising ball committee. She is also a member of the board of ECS and of Friends of the MUHC.

Widow of Timon Deichmann, who lost a fight with cancer at age 39 in 2010, Gallery lives on Strathcona, where she is raising their son and daughter (Nicolas and Natasha Deichmann) aged 15 and 13 respectively.

By profession, Mary Gallery lists herself as an executive search professional, having worked in the field with Stuart Spencer, Raymond Recherche de Cadres and Ferry Kron. She has taken time off and says she now has "the time and the passion" to serve on council.

She graduated from ECS, Collège Jean de Brébeuf (1988), the University of Western Ontario in political science (1991) and Laval University in French as a second language.

Christian Matossian, District 5

As manager of indigenous relations for TransCanada Pipelines, Christian Matossian says his career in building "supportive relationships" and partnering with communities is a strength he hopes to bring to city council. He describes himself as "a community relations professional."

Running for election in District 5, this would include "building relations with the commercial sector and landlords," he said. He also lists the need to find an appropriate use for the old train station, plan for the safe co-existence of pedestrians, bicycles and vehicles and provide "additional venues" for listening to residents.

"I care deeply about the community I was born and brought up in," he said in announcing his candidacy. "I can identify with the Westmount population with three generations of our family currently living in the city."

His father, Nicolas (a three-term city councillor, 1991-2001), is well known on the Westmount hockey scene, where Christian has coached minor hockey for six years. "I am following in his footsteps and hope to contribute to keeping up the quality of life and vitality of our community."

He and his wife Amanda Dawson, are raising their three sons at their home on Windsor. They are Soen, 10, Angus, 8, and Nicolas, 5.

Matossian attended Selwyn House and LCC. He obtained an honours degree in geography from McGill in 1996 and a master's degree in Urban Planning in 1998 from the University of Western Ontario.

He worked internationally in Essen, Germany and in London before returning home in 2006 to pursue his career with Rio Tinto Alcan, EEM Sustainable Management, Barrick Gold and now TransCanada Pipelines.

Water main breaks on St. Cath., closes street at Atwater

BY LAUREEN SWEENEY

A water main broke on St. Catherine just west of Atwater August 2, a Wednesday afternoon, causing traffic to be diverted from the area as water works personnel from Westmount Public Works closed the valves to stem the flow of water onto the street during the rush hour.

Public Security sergeant Robert Forbes had been patrolling at 4:19 pm when he discovered a large amount of water flowing down Atwater from St. Catherine, said assistant Public Security director Kimberley Colquhoun.

He called Public Works and police, and positioned patrol cars to block off the area.

The Miso restaurant at the southwest corner was among businesses on the south side of St. Catherine evacuated while firefighters checked for possible flooding in the underground Metro passage. None was found, she said.

The water was turned off within an hour after Forbes placed his call to Public Works, Colquhoun said.

The break occurred in the 10-inch diameter water main, said Councillor Patrick

Martin, commissioner of Public Works. Crews worked overnight to replace about nine feet of the 100-year-old pipe, completing the work early in the morning.

“Montreal had been doing a lot of opening and closing of water in the area, so the pipe could have been under additional pressure,” he explained.

The roadway on St. Catherine remained closed while the extent of the washout and damage was being assessed, Martin said.

Power outage not related

An electrical outage that affected eastern Westmount from St. Catherine to the summit was unrelated, he said.

According to Hydro Westmount’s Sam Lipari, superintendent of operations and maintenance, the blackout began at 10:30 pm when a primary circuit caused a master breaker to trip and leave 572 customers without electricity. Within one minute, however, power was restored to 431.

The remaining 141 were transferred to standby circuits with the last of them, including Martin who lives on The Boulevard at the east city limits, regaining power at 12:06 am.

fully integrated in the club. The city took over the deteriorating property the same year.

In 1996, the clubhouse was demolished.

The city constructed an electrical substation deep underground and, in 1996, built an enlarged replica of the green-shingled clubhouse above it. The present pavilion, designed by architects Fournier, Gersovitz & Moss, has a modern kitchen, locker rooms, washrooms and a sitting area.

This is the last of the numerous sports clubs that were found throughout Westmount in the 19th century – the Heather Curling Club, the Côte St. Antoine Tennis Club, St. George's Snowshoe Club, the MAAA – and many more.

Lawn bowling continues to be played here, and tournaments are held with other communities.

Caroline Breslaw is president of the Westmount Historical Association.

Inaugurated July 20

Summit Circle walking path now waits only for more trees

BY LAUREN SWEENEY

After its official inauguration July 20, the city's new walking path that replaces the north section of Summit Circle is now virtually complete, according to Nicolas Mory, the city's superintendent of arboriculture and horticulture.

A few more trees are still to be planted in the fall, he said. These include a mix of species: sugar maple, American basswood, black walnut, shaggy-bark hickory and birch.

Among those attending the inauguration were Mayor Christina Smith, former mayor Peter Trent, Councillor Cynthia Lulham, commissioner of Sustainability and Parks, and a representative of the Quebec ministry of Culture, which is paying half the project's $1.3-million budget through a grant obtained by Lulham.

While the original budget had been $800,000, it was increased after additional work was required following a risk analysis study, as was the grant, Lulham confirmed last week.

The inauguration went "very well," Lulham said. It was held at the east end of the path. This is the location of a new viewpoint overlooking Mount Royal.

She said she was especially pleased that only enough trees had been pruned to open up the view of the mountain while ensuring the sight of cars and buildings remained hidden.

Wills brings the Thunder

Former Westmounter Adrian Wills premiered his new television series 21 Thunder at the Burgundy Lion pub in St. Henri on July 31. The LCC and Dawson College grad and current Montrealer is one of three co-creators, along with Kenneth Hirsch and Riley Adams. The CBC drama focuses on the trials and tribulations of a Montreal under-21 soccer team.

The network “had come to Montreal looking for shows that were darker and younger,” Wills told the Independent on August 3. “I had been watching documentaries about sports heroes, including an under-21 hockey team. It made for great drama. You know what the players’ goals are, but only 4 percent will make the professional leagues. And real life is going to intersect [with their lives].”

Wills won a “best long form music video” Grammy in 2009 for his film All Together Now about the making of The Beatles/Cirque du Soleil show Love.

His documentarian background may have helped craft a likely tale with his new project. The life of 21 Thunder character Junior Lolo bears a striking resemblance to that of Didier Drogba, but was laid out before the Ivory Coast superstar came to Montreal to play for the Impact in 2015.

The seven remaining episodes of 21 Thunder's first season air on Mondays at 9 pm and on the web after initial transmission.

with regard to whether there is sufficient support for an indoor pool to warrant looking into the matter further,” Deegan states in the letter.

Use of a gym

Among details sought on numbers of potential indoor-pool users and their anticipated frequency, the survey asked whether people would use a gymnasium as part of an indoor pool, and if so, for what purpose and how often.

The survey was conducted by Mark Wilkins Consulting as part of a possible “pre-feasibility” study requested publicly by Councillor Patrick Martin, commissioner of Public Works (see Letters to the Editor April 25, p. 6, and May 16, p. 4.)

Councillor Rosalind Davis, commissioner of Sports and Recreation, and a Masters swimmer, called for an indoor pool as her main priority in the upcoming November 5 municipal election (see story June 27, p. 1).

A number of residents also have been asking for one during the planning process for the Westmount recreation centre (WRC). At that time, a possible location was explored by councillors Martin, Cynthia Lulham and Kathleen Duncan (see July 14, 2009, p. 3).

The city decided at its general committee meeting May 15 to launch a pool-user survey, given that indoor pools are “very costly” to operate, Smith said at the time (see story May 23, p. 1).

As a result, the city wanted to find out what facilities currently exist in and around the community, as well as partnership opportunities and user demand before it might consider conducting a feasibility study into costs and possible locations for building a pool.

Sales analysis

April transfers: Pace slows

Real Estate

ANDY DODGE

The following article relates to the registration of deeds of sale for Westmount property in April 2017, gleaned from non-city sources. A list of sales can be found on p. 17. Also included are earlier sales that have come to the Independent's attention.

The pace of real estate transfers slowed somewhat in April, with 13 one- and two-family dwellings transferred and no condominium sales registered, according to the Independent's research. This after 19 buyers signed on the bottom line in March and 15 in February, leading up to the summer months, which are by far the heaviest-volume months for transfers.

Highest price: Oakland

In April, the highest price was $2,800,000 paid out for 11 Oakland Ave., a detached stone home backing onto the wooded area, which had been in the same family since 1978.

Only one property sold for less than $1 million, $880,000, for an attached duplex on Greene Ave., which had not changed hands since 1963.

Overall among the 13 sales the average price was $1,667,000 for property evaluated by the city at an average $1,508,238, so the total represents a mark-up of 10.5 percent, down slightly from the March figure but certainly an indication that prices are moving up quickly. Compared to the new valuation roll, the January figure was below parity and the February figure was only 7 percent above.

RoseMount estate

In the April list, only two sales were for less than municipal tax value, with the biggest mark-down involving the eastern portion of the former RoseMount estate, 16 Severn Ave., which has been through a great deal of history since its construction in the mid-19th century. The famous mansion was divided in about 1924, and No. 18 became the private Weston School; it sold last November, again for a substantial mark-down after staying in the same hands for more than 30 years. No. 16 had been owned by the Sharp family since 1979.

Mark-down on Delavigne Rd.

The biggest mark-up on the April list, meanwhile, belongs to 52 Delavigne Rd., close to the Severn Ave. property, which brought its owner $2,650,000 – second-highest price of the month – while evaluated at only $1,885,200, thus a mark-up of 41 percent.

Besides the 12 single-family homes and one duplex, the only other sale in April involves land on Mount Pleasant Ave., some 7,000 square feet, which went for just under $175 per square foot. The fact that vacant land is starting to sell in Westmount – two more lots are expected to sell in coming months – is an indication of high demand and low supply here.

1098-98A Greene Ave., lowest price, $880,000.

16 Severn Ave. biggest mark-down, 24 percent.

11 Oakland Ave., highest price, $2,800,000.

52 Delavigne Rd., biggest mark-up, 41 percent.

ABCMTL par Jeanne Painchaud – Discover Montreal and its secrets in this beautiful picture book filled with photos and poetry, in time for Montreal’s 375th anniversary.

‘Book club in a bag’

They Left us Everything: A Memoir by Plum Johnson – After the death of the author’s senile father and cantankerous 93-year-old mother, she and her three younger brothers must empty and sell the beloved family home. The task of going through 23 rooms full of history, antiques and oxygen tanks consumes her, becoming more rewarding than she ever imagined.

The library will be closed for refurbishment August 13 to September 5 (see story June 13, p. 1).

Man flees, crashes car into concrete planter

Tickets for $149 were issued to two 22-year-old men for drinking at the Summit lookout July 31, Public Security officials said. They were spotted at 10:15 pm seated beneath a sign prohibiting the use of alcoholic beverages. They were reported to live in the area of Pointe aux Trembles.

Before police could attend to verify their verbal identification, one offered to look for ID in his parked car. Instead, he suddenly drove off, crashing it into a concrete planter and pushing the heavy item some nine feet out of position. When police arrived, they were given the car’s licence plate number so the city could claim for damages. It is also believed the driver could be charged with hit-and-run causing damage. The second man remained on the scene.

Dog caught running across street

As public safety officers were checking out a house for special holiday attention around 12 noon July 25, they reported spotting a small dog dashing across Cedar Ave., trailing an attached leash. Public Security officials said the dog was quickly caught just before the owner emerged from a house to say the dog had been in the back yard. The owner was given 14 days to obtain a valid dog licence.

Anwoth reconstruction to start this week

Grosvenor, Westmount, Argyle work all on time: city

BY LAUREEN SWEENEY

The city's major road reconstruction projects are all on schedule so far, according to Public Works officials.

These include new water mains, electrical conduit, street lighting, sidewalks and road work on Westmount Ave. (Victoria to Claremont), Grosvenor (Sherbrooke to de Maisonneuve) and Argyle (Sherbrooke to Thornhill).

Similar work on Anwoth (west of Clarke) was scheduled to start August 7 and take 14 weeks.

The Grosvenor work was so far advanced that workers were able to take off the second week of the construction holiday, said Elisa Gaetano, city director of Engineering. Those at the other sites remained on the job.

As of last week, she said, work had progressed without incident on Westmount Ave., where sidewalk reconstruction on the north side was scheduled for this week. Road work is slated for August 14 so the project can be completed by the August 25 deadline and the return of students to school. Both Roslyn and Marianopolis are located on the street.

The work on Argyle is also on schedule to be completed in time for the start of classes at Selwyn House.

Grosvenor discovery

Meanwhile, the Grosvenor work is right on track to be completed in November, Gaetano said. This is despite an unexpected discovery of the presence of a Bell installation. Fortunately, she added, it came early enough in the project that Bell was able to modify a discrepancy in the installation's height so that other work was not affected.

"The residents have been very cooperative," Gaetano said, referring to the particular challenges presented by the long block regarding access and parking (see story April 11, p. 1).

"The big focus so far has been on the waterworks. "Some of the plans for later-stage work such as sidewalk reconfiguration and driveway ramps are still "in progress," she said.

Meanwhile, the particular configuration of hilly and crescent-shaped Anwoth was written into the tender specs for its reconstruction, Gaetano said. This means the contractor is well aware of potential challenges in this regard, she explained. The

This week's work on Westmount Ave. is to include the installation of the new sidewalks on the north side as seen to the right, looking west August 4.

With only three weeks to go before the reconstruction of Westmount Ave. (Victoria to Claremont) is scheduled for completion, the intersection of Victoria and west was a hive of activity August 4.

work starts with the installation of a temporary water supply.

A start date for the reconstruction of Belmont Ave., south of Westmount Ave., has not yet been finalized.

Beer Review: The Connoisseur and the Philistine

Venue: YÏSST

YÏSST (pronounced yeast), February 15

901 St. Zotique East (and St. Hubert), Petite Patrie, close to Jean Talon Market.

David Price, The Philistine; Beer drinker
Ideal beer: stronger-than-average lager, even it's commercial Canadian beer.

Favourite beer: Harp or Sapporo, but Sapporo-in-a-can beats Harp-in-a-can, hands down. On-tap research on this question is still under way.

Greg Dunning, The Connoisseur; Beer drinker, brewer, and hunter.

Ideal beer: one that is manufactured by people who care more about the beer than the money.

Favourite beer: Too many to mention.

YÏSST opened on May 28, 2015 a block away from the St. Hubert arcade, recently made famous by The New York Times (Jan. 11, 2017). Yeast is the core ingredient in YÏSST's offerings of bread, beer and wine. Its core value is commitment to small, local producers for all its ingredients. This is a 16-line taproom (13 beer, two cider, one kombucha). It's not a brewpub, so the offerings are produced off premise. Their wines and ciders are also from Quebec and at least Canada as much as possible, and their bread is produced within the neighbourhood. Ma Brasserie (10 Holt St.) is a cooperative brewery built on the shoulders of four existing brewpubs: Succursale, Isle de Garde, Brouhaha and Noire Blanche. It supplied the house beers for this night's dégustation.

The Philistine: Blonde Boldwin (4.6%) – Pale Ale by Boldwin (Boucherville)

I started with a blonde (or a pale ale, depending on whether you trust the name or the description), which is usually a good haven for the lager-lover in an ale lovers' world. This one was no exception. It did not have "That Taste" (nutty/spicy), which many microbrewed ales have and which many connoisseurs seem to love, but it did have an "Other Taste" which might be That Taste's cousin. On top of that Other Taste, it was a bit sweet and mild. I liked it, but it wasn't a lager – which almost always has neither That Taste or that Other Taste.

The Connoisseur: Beur'slack! (5%) – American Amber Ale by Ma Brasserie (Montreal)

In winter time, it's sometimes preferable to skip blonde and light to get started. This amber tastes British to me, but it is no doubt American because it is hopped exclusively with Cascade, Chinook, Columbus and Crystal hops, which are sourced from the Pacific Northwest. The brewer has utilized them for bittering rather than for aroma. We are so accustomed lately to IPAs that use these same hops for grapefruit and pinecone aroma bombs that I was surprised that they were even used. But there you have it, a perfect start to the evening.

The Philistine: Jazz (5%) – American amber by Jukebox (brewed by Brasseurs de Montreal)

Brown ale is a style that for me can be way too coffee-esque, which my coffee-drinking colleagues have told me is in fact a hazel-nut taste (see my comments on Reservoir's Brown Ale, March 14, p. 19) or just fine, like Creemore's Altbier. This one was fine. It had "some taste," as my notes put it, but too not much. High praise from someone looking for the cold crispness of lager.

The Connoisseur: Blanche de Session (4%) – Belgian Witbier ale by L'Hermite (Kingsey Falls)

A standard summer-thirst quencher. So, what is it anyway? If you call it a witbier, or a white beer, it should contain at least 50 percent wheat and it must be spiced, usually with coriander and orange peel, which are added late in the boiling kettle for aroma. A wit actually has more wheat in it than most wheat beers, but it is called white because the big wheat produces a beige colour versus a typical golden hue. Purposely unfiltered, it's opaque in the glass, allowing for a full appreciation of all the complex ingredients. This Flemish-style ale is really not that unfamiliar because you have seen it at Metro and IGA as Hoegaarden, distributed in pallet-sized quantities by Labatt, which is the Canadian component of the Anheuser-Busch InBev empire. A tastier version, Blanche de Chambly, brewed by its microbrewery competitor Uni-broue, which is now owned by Japanese giant Sapporo. Blanche de Session is the most drinkable version of the three and a great ambassador of the style, but I forbade The Philistine from sampling it because he still files this taste in a third category called "toothpaste." [Yes, I do. Thanks for this "prohibition." – The Philistine.]

The Philistine: Baptême (4.6%) – American blonde by YÏSST and Succursale

Next for me was another blonde, Baptême. This one had That Taste, but less nutty or spicy than what I usually notice. And it had a great texture.

The Connoisseur: IPA (6%) – American – Les Trois Mousquetaires (Brossard)

It was good but you have to like your American hops, which is a polite way of saying it was unbalanced. Sweetness and bitterness have to work together to make the experience pleasant. Factories reduce and balance these components to their absolute minimum to drive out costs. Examples are Sleeman IPA, at one time tasty but really bland now, and Alexander Keith's IPA, which has always been an IPA in label only – pathetic. Okay, so how do you achieve balance? One way is to produce a beer with a higher final gravity. What does that mean? (You chemists running big pharma can skip ahead here.) Before fermentation, beer is full of sugar, extracted from the malt, which gives it an original specific gravity, a measure of suspended solids in a solution. The yeast eats the sugar during fermentation, reducing the sugar content and its gravity. The more sugar you leave in the beer at the end of fermentation, the sweeter it tastes. So, a really bitter IPA needs a high final gravity to hit those hops with some sugar. I would have preferred this scenario but if you are a hophead then you would be fine with this IPA as is.

The Philistine: P'tite Tranquille – (2.5%) – red lager by Le Saint-Pub (Baie-Saint-Paul)

This one had That Taste too, but less than the Baptême. What really shocked me was that this beer was 2.5 percent! I was amazed. It was not watery, or weak bodied, or noticeably less alcoholic. Honestly, it seemed like magic. Hats off.

The Connoisseur: Ahorn – Lager Noire Fumée (8%) – Smoked lager – Succursale/Boswell (Montreal)

Whenever I see a smoked lager on the menu, I have to try it to see if it can measure up to Aecht Schlenkerla Rauchbier Märzen (SAQ, via Bamberg Germany). I seriously can't believe how fantastic this beer is! Oh my! You know you are in the midst of greatness when your rate of consumption increases as you sip and you just can't stop yourself. I also love this beer because it contains one of my favourite foods, maple syrup. And the brewer has not overdone it as the sweetness was just right; a genuine Goldilocks moment. I followed it immediately with another 1/2 pint before moving on. I would have carried home a dozen of these, if they were offering growlers, which – by the way – is now a legal practice in Quebec for brewpubs.

The Philistine: Beur'slack! (5%) – American Amber Ale by Ma Brasserie (Montreal)

My last beer was the Beur'slack, which had That Taste, but at a quarter strength. That's good (for me, anyway), but why can't microbrewers, and tap rooms in particular, rustle up some lagers (or one!) for the lager lovers? We're drinkers, too, and there are some insipid lagers out there to drive drinkers to the improved varieties that microbreweries can offer.

The Connoisseur: Loulou Porter (5%) – British Ale – Hopfenstark

Mia among the 'left-behinds' from moving day

LYSANNE FOWLER

The SPCA is full to the brim at the worst time of the year, the July moving month. There are many cats for adoption, some of which are adorable kittens like Mia. Please open your hearts and your homes to a loving pet in need. Many have been surrendered or found abandoned as casualties of the moving season. Through this transition at the shelter, they remain perfectly healthy and happy family pets, which are waiting for new homes.

Young Mia is a beautiful and affectionate grey-and-white domestic short-hair with huge green eyes. She is up to date with her inoculations, kitten health treatments and is now spayed. Her pet ID number at the Montreal SPCA is 35753285.

Please drop by the shelter's adoption centre at 5215 Jean Talon. Visiting hours are from 12 pm to 7 pm Monday to Friday, and 11 am to 5 pm Saturday and Sunday. Or call them at 514.735.2711 for more information.

Also keep in mind that if you cannot adopt on the long-term, there are wonderful opportunities to foster a kitten who would benefit from a home environment throughout the adoption process with the basic necessities provided. You can find out more at the Montreal SPCA foster department by contacting 514.735.2711, ext. 2237 or pfa_fp@spcamontreal.com.

Your neighbour, Lysanne

(L'Assomption)

After that last mind-blowing, off the chart offering, this porter tasted respectable. Pretty hard to go back to a simple classic at 5 percent after an 8-percent specialty. Just like you wouldn't have a Portuguese red after a port. But, tasked with trying to cover as much of the menu in one sitting, I digress as much as I can, without falling off my barstool or getting lost on the Metro.

Venue summary

The Connoisseur: I didn't get the feeling that we were in a true beer emporium. The wine and cocktail list dwarfed the beer. There is nothing stopping them from having a beer cellar, since the same Quebec microbreweries supplying YISST with kegs are producing bottle vintages suitable for storage and aging. There are better places to go in Montreal for beer (e.g. 32-tap Vices and Versa). Bars are already appearing in North America with curated beer selections. Next time you are in Toronto, go to Birreria Volo on College St. I will try to come up with a curated Montreal beer bar next time.

The Philistine: I liked this bar more than Greg. I am used to menus that neglect lager drinkers and the ale offerings were good by the lowered expectations that lager drinkers have to expect from beer snobs ... umm ... I mean beer connoisseurs. I liked the atmosphere and service, and one can always tune out wine and cocktails lists. Just sit back and think of lagers. It works for me.
