Province crafts deal with Montreal, demerged mayors

One tax bill, less money to agglom

Roslyn closes

NEWS & ANALYSIS BY DON WEDGE

Everyone seems to have come out a winner in the new pacts between the Quebec government, Montreal and the demerged cities. The average abused suburban taxpayer will get at least slight relief from subsidizing Big Montreal and there will be only one tax bill – from Westmount – in future.

For once, even Premier Jean Charest looks good with his municipal stewardship.

It was a moment of municipal political history as Westmount mayor Karin Marks president of the Association of Suburban Mayors signed the multi-partner agreement with Municipal Affairs Minister Nathalie Normandeau and Montreal mayor Gérald Tremblay at Montreal city hall on June 12.

In a carefully choreographed ceremony, Marks was followed by all the other mayors of reconstituted cities. The point could not have been made more strongly that the government recognized reconstituted cities as enti- continued on p. 5

Mayor: Local control of security key

BY LAUREEN SWEENEY

Westmount “absolutely” must retain local control of its Public Security Unit, Mayor Karin Marks said last week in reacting to a police plan for some form of integration of municipal and other security forces on Montreal Island.

While the subject of integrating Public Security into the police force has surfaced from time to time over the years, Westmount can be best served by being able to hire and train its own personnel and direct their work according to local needs,” Marks told the Westmount Independent.

“It has to remain a local service,” she said.

Police to present new plan

Marks said Montreal police director Yvan Delorme is to make a presentation on the subject of a “global approach” to public security to the 15 demerged suburbs before the meeting of the agglomeration council June 19. “I’ll know continued on p. 15

Our Health

By EVE ASPINALL
MEMBER OF THE HEALTHY CITY PROJECT

If we are going to look after our environment effectively, we must be physically and mentally able to do so. We have to look after our health by taking care of ourselves and, when unwell, have access to good and continuing care.

As the need for health care increases with the aging of the population, health services are declining. Approximately two million Quebec residents do not have a family doctor.

Legacy of 1990s

This dates back to the mid 1990s when the federal government, in order to balance its budget, cut transfer payments to the provinces, drastically reducing the money available for health and education. Trade agreements (such as NAFTA, WTO, FTAA) continue to take precedence. These agreements and financial treaties are not required to be made public even to those who may be affected. These decisions are made by appointed politicians, and the decisions and expenditures come at the expense of services: our health, education, culture, etc.

Across Canada, smaller hospitals that served their communities well and efficiently (such as the Queen Elizabeth Hospital) were indiscriminately closed under what proved to be a false assumption of cost savings. Moreover, governments began closing nursing schools and cutting enrolment at medical schools by 10 percent. The Quebec government further exacerbated the shortage of medical personnel by offering doctors and nurses “early retirement packages”. This resulted in a huge loss of experienced personnel that left hospitals critically understaffed, as well as serious loss of the invaluable wisdom and experience of older medical and nursing professionals.

Restrictions on doctors

In recent years, Quebec has restricted new doctors’ rights to practise in Montreal by forcing them to work in outer regions. (Many who were trained here in our universities and hospitals have left and are unlikely to return.) This translates into a deprivation of Montrealers’ access to primary health care without any say on our part. “A quarter of Quebec’s people have no regular physician. A third of people in Montreal have no physician,” says Dr. Martin Dawes, director of Family Medicine at McGill University.

For continuity of health care, you need to have a family doctor who knows and understands you, who can diagnose what ails you, prescribe medication if needed, refer you to a specialist if required, keep chronic conditions under control, and generally keep you in optimum condition and out of hospitals. It is not known how many peo-

Hort. Society presents bird bath for 10th year

The Westmount Horticultural Society marked its 10th anniversary June 10 in the story garden of the Westmount Public Library with the presentation of a bird bath. ple have older doctors who may be retiring soon and will find themselves in the position of so many others with no family doctor to turn to. This is a frightening position, especially for the elderly.

Currently, family physicians, Dr. Dawes reported, are forced by the Quebec government to work 12 hours in other health areas, often in emergency rooms. This reduces their availability to the patients by well over 25 percent. He added, “There is overwhelming evidence that the lower the number of family physicians, the higher the number of avoidable admissions, the higher number of adverse effects of disease such as strokes and heart attacks, as well as higher rates of death. Basically, your family physician, should you be so lucky as to have one, reduces your chance of having a severe disease, being hospitalized or dying. Unfortunately, your government is now playing Loto Quebec with your health and it is pure luck whether you have one or not.”

This situation is critical, and measures have to be taken to remedy the situation.

These will be discussed in Part Two...

Park coverage increased

Stepping up patrols in major Westmount parks over the summer, eight cadets have been hired for two daytime shifts while auxiliary public safety officers will patrol at night. “This will allow us to provide full coverage, seven days a week, from 7 am to 10:30 pm at Westmount, King George (Murray) and Stayner parks,” said Public Security director Blondin.

So far this year till June 1, 19 tickets have been issued to persons found violating the park curfew, he said. Each cost the offender $37. The curfew is in effect from 12 midnight to 5 am. Being drunk in a park cost another person $68.

During the first week of June, nine tickets were issued to people for having drunk alcoholic beverages or being in possession of them in Summit Park, King George Park and Westmount Park.

Westmount Square blackout

A power outage at Westmount Square Saturday, June 7, raised concerns the entire complex might have to be evacuated in the midst of the heat wave, Public Security officials said.

Firefighters and public safety officers were called to the scene at 6:30 pm to assist residents, but as interior temperatures rose to 32°C, temporary repairs to defective cables in the building were made by 10:25 pm. No evacuation was required.

Heavy storm, light damage

Westmount was lightly affected by the severe storm that hit Montreal on June 10. No trees were lost, but ones on Grenville Ave., Rosemont Cres. and Gordon Cres. were substantially damaged. City workers picked up branches felled by the storm in about 30 other locations.

Demerged cities get back their roads

ties, and not just as tax fodder for the centre city.

To emphasize the harmony that the province wants to prevail over island affairs, the female mayors and minister all received two-cheek kisses from the male signatories – who had to make do with multiple handshakes!

As the smiles evaporate, what we are left with is Westmount and the other independent suburbs having to subsidize fewer Montreal facilities like the Claude Robillard Arena or Angrignon Park. That will save a few million on the approximately $2 billion agglom budget.

The biggest visible change is that ownership of arterial roads will revert to local cities. They will again assume the cost of maintenance. “The difference is that necessary work will be done on them,” explained Mayor Marks. “Until now Montreal has spent the agglom money, but not much of it on suburban roads.”

Still to fight for

- The agglom remains undemocratic and unfair to the suburbs and to some of those trapped in the big city. Reforms are still needed so that the name of the agglom is Montreal island, rather than Montreal city. That would reflect the reality.
- The agglom council remains a rubber-stamping body. The rules exclude meaningful debates and votes. All the Montreal councillors, or at least every borough mayor, should have a seat and a meaningful vote.
- With the Montreal executive committee controlling every decision, it is important that the suburbs have representation on it for all the issues affecting the agglom.
- The June 12 pact acknowledges that there are issues to be resolved. Very difficult is to define which of the downtown core's operating costs should be subsidized. The Quebec civil servants who brokered the agreement have much work to do!

DW

Tremblay had held out for a fiscally neutral solution as a prerequisite for any support to reforms. He got his wish: the Quebec government will give Montreal $34 million annually to make up for the lost income from the suburbs.

Quebec subsidizes Tremblay

There always has to be some losers, and Quebec's taxpayers, generally, will have to pay for that subsidy.

The agglom budget will drop by approximately $250 million with some responsibilities redirected to the cities. For instance, at present, Westmount clears snow from its arterial streets, but sends the bill to Montreal for settlement on the agglom account. Under the new deal, Westmount will have to pay the whole cost.

There could be a net saving of $4.5 million, but Marks warns that it may not transfer into tax relief.

“We have been left with enormous debts after the forced merger and we will need funds for rebuilding roads. Council wants to avoid adding to debts, and again get close to pay-as-you-go,” she told me.

The ability of the suburban mayors to intervene in agglom affairs has been increased, although the undemocratic structure of agglom council, with its Tremblay-nominated Montreal members and pre-determined voting, is unchanged.

A new law governing the agglom is expected to clear the provincial legislature this week with ADQ support.

Among other things, it will create an audit committee with two seats for suburban members. There will also be an independent secretariat to provide information to the suburbs about Montreal's proposals.

Earlier intervention – Marks

It was an unmentioned, forbidden, subject, but everyone at the ceremony – packed with Tremblay employees and supporters – knew that the deal would not have been reached without the intervention of Raymond Bachand, the minister responsible for Montreal.

He recognized that the suburbs had to be helped, and spoke out forcibly at Tremblay's intransigence to change.

While losing a few plumes, two of the Montreal mayor's major wishes were granted: recognition by the Quebec government that Montreal is the metropolis of Quebec, not just another municipality like a country town, and the ability to levy taxes in addition to those on property.

Tremblay wanted parity with Toronto in this regard and the government gave him similar scope. He also got control of Ville Marie and, in emergencies, any of the 18 other boroughs.

Surprisingly, Premier Charest's name was hardly mentioned, if at all, at the ceremony. The man who had caused so much difficulty by reneging on the demerger promise and foisting the undemocratic referendum is also the person who triggered the new agreement.

Faced with troubling election results last year, particularly on the West Island, he included the agglom as one of the eight issues to be resolved by this summer. Bachand, Normandeau and some smart civil servants delivered for him.

“It does feel good,” Marks said the next morning when she called from a conference on sustainable transport. “Not all the problems are solved, but the stage has been set for a better cooperation. Such an attitude could, in itself, lead to a better agglom.”

After the Normandeau ceremony, Marks had met Tremblay at an evening cultural event. “As he spoke about his day, I was very pleased to note his generosity of spirit toward the other mayors,” she said. “I am very hopeful about the future.”

SAVE THE PARK!
TOLD NO “TALES”

I would like to comment on the letter to the editor by Jessica Weisel: “Save The Park’s Mesmerizing Tales” (Westmount Independent, May 27).

I was present at the May 2007 open meeting on Westmount Park’s lower fields. After reading Ms. Weisel’s letter a couple of times, I had to wonder whether we had been at the same gathering. I refer to her comment that this meeting had “sadly been hijacked by the aforementioned fanatical group,” referring to members of Save the Park!

This meeting was carefully arranged by the city and moderated by Roderick McDonald, a McGill law professor. A review panel of consultants spoke at some length and 18 individual briefs were presented by citizens including individuals from Narnia Daycare, Westmount Park School, the WMA, two physicians speaking to safety issues and several others, including five people representing Save The Park! Questions from the audience addressed a wide spectrum of issues ranging from esthetics to possible parking problems. The meeting more or less concluded with a show of hands from the approximately 400 people in the audience who overwhelmingly rejected the synthetic turf proposal.

The suggestion by Ms. Weisel that the meeting was effectively co-opted and manipulated by a small “fanatical” group of Save the Parkers is ridiculous and, frankly, insulting to the large number of concerned and responsible citizens who found the time to attend and participate. Her reference to Save the Park! as a group that “essentially consists of about four people who seem to have a lot of time on their hands” is arrogant, mean-spirited, childish and as far as I know, not at all accurate. Or has Ms. Weisel privately investigated their employment records?

I’m not a member of Save the Park!, but Westmount Park’s lower fields, looking west. Artificial turf – rejected. Fenced field – in the works.

I have had my own concerns. I spent a lot of time doing my own research and expressing my opinions. I suppose that from Ms. Weisel’s perspective that this behaviour would qualify me as “fanatic” as well.

Finally, I might as well take the opportunity to repeat my view that the prospect of a metal fence around two thirds of the lower field is rather sad. I’ve always loved the feeling of that big open space available to the public.

Riding candidates follow-up
Candidates readying for upcoming by-election

The Westmount-Ville Marie federal by-election must be announced no later than July 26, and the three candidates interviewed by the Westmount Independent (Marc Garneau, Guy Dufort and Claude Genest) are already working hard.

Contrary to other press reports, a fourth candidate, McGill University political science student Charles Larivée, was acclaimed by the Bloc Québécois on April 3. He was out of the city for the week prior to presstime and was not able to comment on his efforts.

The NDP has a candidate search in progress and hopes to set a date for its nomination meeting in the next two weeks. Several people have expressed an interest in running.

Westmount forms about one fifth of the riding. All three interviewed candidates showed their interest in Westmount voters by attending the annual meeting of the WMA on May 5, but that’s not all they’ve been up to...

Garneau hits the ground running

Former astronaut and federal Liberal Marc Garneau has been longest in the undeclared race (since October 19, 2007) and has been active at many Westmount events, including speeches at the Westmount High Old Boys’ Association, Place Kensington, the Rotary Club of Westmount and Selwyn House’s career day. He counted 89 such events in the riding, including 16 in Westmount. Among the visits outside Westmount were to the Old Brewery Mission and to Accueil Bonneau.

Relating his impressions to date at the Independent’s offices on June 3 – in keeping with his proactive campaign style, an interview he requested – Garneau sees Westmounters as very concerned with national-level issues, including the environment and the perception of Canada in the world.

In one such area, the environment, he explained that the federal Liberals would be presenting a new “carbon tax” plan (with other aspects) over the coming months. Garneau also feels that Westmounters care about how the perception of Canada has suffered, in his view, from episodes like the Bernier affair and from the Harper government’s stance at international conferences like the one in Bali.

Within Canada, Garneau also took exception to what he sees as Harper’s confrontational approach with the provinces.

He also declared his support for federal involvement in combating homelessness via an infrastructure program called the Homeless Partnering Strategy, which he pointed out is the renamed version of a Liberal program called Supporting Communities Partnership Initiative.

Dufort focused on whole riding, issues that “overflow”

Reached by phone at his downtown office, Conservative Party candidate and lawyer Guy Dufort explained how he has been active with fundraisers, reviewing the issues and activities within the riding, including two in Westmount. He has also started a door-to-door riding-wide campaign, beginning in eastern NDG, which has reached western Westmount.

Dufort was reluctant to identify issues specific to Westmount or of special interest to Westmounters, stating that “Westmount is not an island.”

He did point out a number of “overflow” issues that affect all corners of the riding, including public safety and homelessness, affordable housing, municipal infrastructure, education and the economy.

He is proud of the Conservatives’ economic record, especially the repayment of federal debt. “If the debt is reduced by 13 percent, we will need 13 percent fewer taxpayers [to support the current level of social programs].”

Dufort has been surprised at how often education has been mentioned to him by riding residents, given that it is primarily a provincial jurisdiction. He agrees that the federal government has a role in shaping an “economy of knowledge” and points to the success of RIM/BlackBerry as a company that benefited from government R&D support.

On homelessness, he underlined the importance of moving individuals towards autonomy and supports federal funds going directly to frontline groups that actually interact with the homeless.

Genest: Westmount can be “conscience of Canada”

Broadcaster, teacher and Green Party candidate Claude Genest visited the Independent’s offices on June 3 exuding enthusiasm and energy. Locally, he planned to attend the June Westmount Horticultural Society meeting, as well as film Westmounters for his continued on p. 7

Genest turned the well-known dictum "all politics is local" on its head: "all politics is global, too." He went on to draw links between environmental issues and a host of other concerns, including health, the economy and infrastructure.

He contends that what he characterizes as investing in solutions will not make the economy suffer, as many worry. Green policies make economic sense, according to him, since costs like pollution should be charged back to polluters so that good decisions (e.g. less polluting) can be made.

Pied-à-Terre closing soon

By ANNIKA MELANSON

Local gift and home decoration shop, Pied-à-Terre, which has been in business for almost 15 years, will close its doors at 4909 Sherbrooke St. on June 29.

"It will be strange not to be here," said Lori McGuigan, who has managed the store for 10 years. The store, which is owned by Accent de Ville, a large Montreal wholesale company, has decided to close and not renew the lease. It was then that McGuigan thought about taking over the business herself.

She approached the landlord of the building, but was dismayed to discover that "the rent has increased by over 30 percent, which makes it impossible for me to do so. Retail is difficult and we are all just trying to survive. The only ones that seem to be able to afford it are the big stores like American Apparel," said McGuigan. "It's sad for the neighbourhood," she added and "residents are really disappointed." McGuigan has started a memory book, in which "people have written lovely things."

The owner of the building, Nerra Khanna, said that the owners of the boutique "were very good tenants" and that the shop was "a favourite for many people." When asked about the rental increase, Khanna responded that "it's a business" and "my rents are confidential."

Other local merchants are also feeling the squeeze. Nearby at 4919A Sherbrooke, LMNOP co-owner Shelly Kerman – who does not have rent issues – is concerned about the local shopping scene, "When we opened 17 years ago, there were no big box stores. If this happens, we are going to lose the charm and personalized service of owner-operated stores."

Another local merchant, who wishes to remain anonymous, informed the Independent that rents have increased by at least 30 percent since 2002.

Westmount landmark Folklore at 4879 Sherbrooke has been owned and operated by Gail and Gerard Fellerath since 1974. They have noticed a large municipal tax increase, especially over the past few years. "We wouldn't have survived if we didn't own the building," said Gail. "Whether you own or rent, the tax increase has made a difference. It is a dangerous situation in terms of survival of local shops." "The city has been supportive of our needs," added Gerard. A local commercial building owner, who wished to remain unidentified, informed the Independent that taxes have increased by 40 percent since 2002.

At the time of the interview with the Felleraths, Rita Stafford, the owner of Café Gourmet, which used to be on Sherbrooke St., happened to be in the store. Stafford closed the store in 2003. "Rent became a big issue, as did high taxes, and it just wasn't viable," said Stafford, who has since moved her coffee merchant business to Verdun. "We decided to give up the retail store," added Stafford, who now conducts most of her business over the internet and by telephone.

Stafford still sells coffee to her faithful Westmount clientele, who can pick it up at Folklore. In Pied-à-Terre's case, the closure will be final.

BY ROBERT J. GALBRAITH

Westmount's soccer season winds down this week with the last games on Friday, June 20. The eight-week-long season has been a success, according to sports coordinator Stephen Robaire.

"We've been lucky with the weather and only had to cancel two games due to lightning, which is great compared to other years."

The fields held up well with only the usual wear and tear at the east field in front of Westmount Park School. The main field was in extremely good shape.

Now is the season of summer camps, swimming and tennis lessons, all of which have some openings still available for those still wishing to register for these activities. The summer camps are based in the arena.

Team sports start up again in September. There will be a sports banquet held in September where medals will be handed out to the soccer champs in each group for this season.

For more information on summer activities, please contact Westmount Cultural, Sports and Recreation Activities at 514.989.5353 or log on to www.westmount.org

The June 5 event continued inside Victoria Hall with dinner and dancing to Joseph Segreti's live band, before wrapping up at "midnight plus". 200 people attended the event (up from 180 in previous years), which was sold out. Organizers were once encouraged to buy whole tables, but demand is so strong that they are now unable to do so.

Library team victorious in walk-off

BY LAUREEN SWEENEY

A team of 30 from the Westmount Public Library has won a national walking competition for library workers, clocking a total of 8,268 km in a cross-Canada challenge.

The local team was so motivated to win against 12 other participating libraries from St. John's to Vancouver, that 45 per cent of their score was chalked up in a three-week tie-breaker with the Kingston Public Library.

"It was a huge bonding experience," said circulation clerk Caroline Proctor, the Westmount team's co-captain. "I knew we had team spirit, but I never realized we had that much. We really have created our own little family."

At lunch, they walked with each other sharing experiences and learning more about each other.

Not really so far

Individually, they took advantage of every opportunity to walk, forsaking their cars and even public transportation whenever possible, handing in their distances on a regular basis. "It made us realize how close the grocery store really was," added co-captain Wendy Wayling, children's librarian.

It was Wayling, in fact, who spearheaded Westmount's participation after attending a library workshop of the Ontario Library Association in Toronto. It was an easy sell to the Westmount staff as a physical fitness program and team building experience.

Called "Canucks Run Amok", the 2008 challenge was organized by the Hamilton Public Library, which tallied all scores weekly based on a handicap system and posted them for all to follow at canuck-srunamok.blogspot.com.

Off to a cold start

"When we started out at the beginning of March in the bad weather, it required a lot of motivation," Proctor said.

But enthusiasm caught on quickly. And when she and co-worker Gayle White spent a weekend in New York City, they took their pedometers with them and chalked up another 25 km each by walking everywhere, she said.

When the winning libraries were announced May 22, Westmount and Kingston placed first and second, with third place going to the public library in Richmond, BC.

Individually, Westmount "bragging rights" went to librarian Donna Lach, who walked a total of 800 km, followed closely by Gayle White with 720 km.

Other top walkers included Colette Connors (578 km), library director Ann Moffat (380 km), and Caroline Proctor with 370 km. In the final tally, A/V clerk Janette Bruce was named "most-improved".

Regardless of individual scores, Proctor said, "every little bit helped."

And, said Wayling, "I hope we do it again next year."

Mayor supports local control of Public Security

Meanwhile, Marks said the subject has been raised at a meeting of Montreal's public safety committee and she has discussed it with the chairman Claude Dauphin.

"I made our position absolutely clear to him." And while he understood that an integrated approach is of importance to the police department, "he understands that to us it is not acceptable."

A different Westmount operation

For the city of Westmount, Marks said, Public Security is a unique operation. In carrying out its main mandate to enforce municipal bylaws, its personnel have police technology training and are city employees who answer directly to the city rather than to private security companies. Many have worked their entire careers in the city and have clearly defined roles.

"Should there be exceptionally close co-operation between police and Public Security? Absolutely. But this can be achieved by working together as a partnership of equal partners."

Marks pointed to the close working relationship that exists between Public Security and the police. Westmount has always treated the local police chief as a Westmount "department head" and encouraged communication.

At the work level, because PSU shifts parallel police ones, personnel have developed working relationships.

Montreal inherits borough forces

Interestingly, while municipal public security forces originated in the suburbs after the creation of the island-wide police forces, Montreal has inherited at least three through the mergers of St. Laurent, Verdun and Outremont, now "boroughs" of Montreal. Marks said she did not know whether or not this may be a factor in the latest integration issue.

Westmount's PSU, founded in January 1980 shortly after Hampstead's, consists of 55 personnel including public safety officers and auxiliaries, parking inspectors, park cadets, dispatchers, office and parking permits staff. All are governed by a code of ethics adopted by the city in 1992.

The force has the flexibility to restructure as recently required to meet evolving needs, said its director, Richard Blondin. A minimum of five cars now patrol day and night, an increase in overnight coverage.

Foster Search

BY RENA RUBIN,
FOSTER CARE & RECRUITMENT WORKER,
BATSHAW YOUTH & FAMILY CENTRES

There are children, 0 to 17 years, who need to count on a family who will make them feel safe and will care, listen to and support them. As the children have experienced difficulties in their families, whether it is negligence, rejection, or abuse, they may have special needs. They may present with emotional or social difficulties, exhibit developmental delays, or have medical problems and behavioural issues.

Attention and care are important, as is nurturing, stability, stimulation and structure whether it be for one or two weekends per month, or for the short, medium or long term. Here are some of them.

The children

Saysha, 6, Alyssa, 8, and Tommy, 10, are siblings who would be a delightful addition to an energetic family two weekends a month. The girls are sociable and outgoing, love music and dancing. Tommy is gifted at drawing and into computer games.

Nick, 11, has ADHD. He is industrious and has already earned money shovelling and salting walkways and driveways this winter. In grade 5, he is academically at the grade 1 level at best. He has the emotional ability to attach and needs a foster family.

Dimitri, 11, lives in a group home, "All I have is a roof over my head." Having suffered many losses, he wants and needs to have his own family who will work with educators who understand his special needs. He will take time to trust, but he is compassionate and kind-hearted.

If you are single or a couple, with or without children, working outside the home or not, you can offer your services. Professional support and a tax-free stipend to cover the cost of caring for a child are provided.

Westmount Art Scene

Chris Mangiaracina and Anne-Sophie Morelle

BY HEATHER BLACK

“We had the experience but missed the meaning.”

The words of T. S. Elliot’s “The Dry Salvages” are recalled in the paintings of American Christopher Mangiaracina at Collins Lefebvre Stoneberger and in the patina-rich bronzes of Belgium sculpture Anne-Sophie Morelle at Han Art. Although working in different mediums, each artist challenges the viewer to consider past experiences.

Chris Mangiaracina at Collins, Lefebvre, Stoneberger

Christopher Mangiaracina paints his experiences and his surroundings – a seascape where a beach umbrella rests unopened on a deck chair, green fields where bagpipers practise, or the African terrain of lions or elephants. Painted vigorously on aluminum or panel, robust swathes of colour create bold, almost carefree or playful, designs. Yet each is a carefully constructed image, one pose is selected over another, a new reality compiled from endless drawings.

In “The Dry Salvages” – the artist’s response to T. S. Elliot’s poem – an elephant’s heavy mass is juxtaposed against a fragile, propped-up tree. In “Pyre”, wisps of smoke swirl around kilted musicians like the strains of piped music. In “Key Biscayne” storm skies, fluid seas and two empty deck chairs create an ominous atmosphere. Questions arise: Who were the two occupants and where did they go? The scenes are personal, but strangely familiar, as if from a film or from past experience.

The artist paints using an extended brush. Extraneous elements disappear to reveal only an essential form or colour. Capturing our attention, with the vitality of generously applied paint, he creates a dynamic mood. Here pigment is three dimensional, almost sculptural, and definitely memorable.

Anne-Sophie Morelle at Han Art

Sculptor Anne-Sophie Morelle captures the human figure in bronze – a young girl sits forward, shoulders hunched, a child sits cocoonlike in a blanket, or a child huddles next to an oversized cat. Initially created in clay, the patina greens, blues and brown casts retain a fragile clay-like texture that conveys a tenderness and protective intimacy.

In “La guépard”, a child peers out from behind an enormous cat – perhaps the Egyptian deity Bast, protector of children. In “Ici et ailleurs”, a young girl leans forward, arms braced and shoulders hunched, also conveying vulnerability; while in “Grace”, a child emerges butterfly-like from a swaddling blanket. Almost life-size, the poses are not grand gestures, but gentle reminders of childhood fear, doubt and hope.

The sitter is pensive or playful and oblivious to the viewer. These poses are singular – the artist’s own four children are models – yet capture our common experience of childhood. Through the portrayal of a fragile spirit, a gentle modesty, and triumphant unveiling, we are transported to the time of our own metamorphosis.

Experience revisited

Painter Chris Mangiaracina recalls in robust strokes of coloured pigment, stories of adventure, while Anne-Sophie Morelle revisits childhood where rich patinas suggest clarity in time’s wake. But through their selection of precise moments, each artist evokes a common narrative. And by observing their work, the viewer is transported – like T. S. Elliot’s seafarers of “The Dry Salvages”.

The paintings of Chris Mangiaracina are on exhibit until June 28 at Collins Lefebvre Stoneberger, 4928 Sherbrooke. The work of Anne-Sophie Morelle continues to September 28 at Han Art, 4209 St. Catherine.

It was supposed to rain on Saturday, June 14, so some Vic Villagers made sure to get out to the Westmount Street Festival on opening-day Friday.

It turned out not be necessary, as Saturday shoppers at the festival and the nearby Roslyn Ave. garage sale discovered.

The festival continued on a sunny Sunday. Proceeds from the Roslyn Ave. sale benefited Westmounter Keith Martin’s “Moving Muscles” cross-Canada bike ride to support research into muscular dystrophy (www.movingmusclesride.ca) and the women’s shelter of the Old Brewery Mission.

End of an era at Roslyn

BY KRISTIN MCNEILL

"What are they going to do without me?" said Arlene Rill, jokingly, as our interview on the front steps of Roslyn School kept getting interrupted by staff members stopping to ask her questions. Rill, who retires this summer after 17 years as a teacher at Roslyn, will also preside over the last graduating class (and other classes) from the English (i.e. non-French immersion) stream. For photo of Rill see p. 1.

History at Roslyn

Her roots at the school run deep. Rill is a Roslyn alumna herself, as is her daughter, now graduating from high school, who was in the now phased-out English stream. Rill previously worked at Hampstead and Bancroft, for a total of 35 years in teaching.

Rill said although she has never had much time for herself (she brought up her daughter on her own and taught school full time), she will continue to work either with kids or older people. She suspects she will be busier than ever.

The decision to close down the English stream, also known as the Core Program (distinct from Quebec's Bilingual and French Immersion programs) was taken in 2005 by the English Montreal School Board (EMSB), phased in so grades 3 and up could graduate at Roslyn.

According to Rill, there were many benefits for both teacher and student in the English stream. Not only was her graduating class small (it numbered 14 versus a norm of 25 to 30), but the same students had her through grades 3 to 6.

"At the beginning year, there is none of the trivialities. We start instantly. I know them like the palm of my hand," she said. In answer to what attracted her to the program, she said "It's not usually people's first choice, but it was mine. I get to be with the kids. I get to know them better – inside and out." Teachers in the program have their students all day long, whereas in French immersion, teachers have two classes, morning and afternoon.

Although the EMSB commissioner for Westmount, Ginette Sauvé-Frankel, dissented on the vote to close the English stream, she explained "what was happening at Roslyn was that there was no demand... And we got to the point where the program is not viable."

At the time of the decision, only 62 of 644 students were in the program.

Core Program thrives in other schools

Sauvé-Frankel said that future students wishing to remain in the English stream can enroll in other schools (subject to transportation boundaries).

She also said they could benefit from being in a school with large enrolments because of the resources allocated to these schools.

For her part, Rill stated one sad reason that the English stream is no longer offered is that kids who are having difficulty in French can no longer switch out of immersion.

"Every child has a gift and if you can recognize that gift, and you can elicit the best from the child, you are doing some good, and that can be anywhere. I just feel that in the English stream, you have more time, it's more relaxed. You own your time more.

9 Lives

BY LYZANNE

This 9 Lives column is different. It has to be. This is an urgent appeal to everyone in Westmount on behalf of all the cats and dogs that have been and will be left behind by their families in the summer moving shuffle. The reality is stark: our shelters are already full to capacity and resources are severely limited.

You can make a huge difference: Please help in any way you can by adopting, fostering, volunteering and donating to the SPCA, which is the main drop-off centre for pets in need. This is the time to help in providing the basics for homeless pets: food, shelter, immunization, treatment. Please make your donation to the SPCA and mail it to 5202 Jean-Talon St. West, Montreal, QC H4P 1X4. Its telephone number is 514-735-2711 and its website is www.spcamontreal.com.

Bridge for Bright Brains:

A matter of honour

BY GEORGE RETEK

All bridge players have been conditioned from the early days to cover an honour card with another honour card (when they have it) nevertheless general rules should never eliminate the need for thinking. Let's look at the following deal from a recent Florida tournament (some cards have been rearranged for illustration). Put yourself in North's seat. You opened undisciplined 2 Spades weak, your left hand opponent bid 2NT, his partner bid 3 Clubs (Stayman) lefty bid 3 Hearts and was raised to four Hearts. Your partner led the Spade 4 and this is what you see:

YOU

♠ A 9 7 6 2
♥ K 6
♦ K 5
♣ 8 6 3 2

♠ 5
♥ J 8 5 4
♦ A 9 6 2
♣ A J 7 4

You win the Ace. Obviously partner can't have much. Even if lefty overcalled 2 NT or 14 or 15 points only, how can your side come to four tricks? If partner has a Club honour, it is finessable. If partner can play a Diamond, you will have a Diamond trick. Declarer doesn't have any more Spade losers, when you played a Spade at trick two, declarer's Jack was covered by the Queen and ruffed in dummy. Are you ready now at trick three when dummy plays the Jack of Heart? You must play partner holding the Ace of Heart and continue with a diamond. Forget about covering an honour with another honour. Let partner win with his presumed Ace of heart and shift to a Diamond. Otherwise declarer can drive out your King of heart and discard his Diamond losers on dummy's Clubs.

The remaining hands were:

DECLARER

♠ K J 3
♥ Q 10 9 7 2
♦ Q J 3
♣ K Q

PARTNER

♠ Q 10 8 4
♥ A 3
♦ 10 8 7 4
♣ 10 9 5

One needs to admire declarer's farsighted play of the Jack of Heart tempting you to cover, as his only chance to make the contract since you cannot switch profitably to Diamonds.

Correction: during layout, an error crept into the hand for The Three D's (May 6, p. 17). Here is the correct hand:

NORTH

♠ K 8 7 4
♥ A K 3
♦ A 10 6 5
♣ A Q

WEST

♠ 5 3 2
♥ 7 5
♦ J 9 4
♣ J 10 7 6 2

EAST

♠ 10 9
♥ J 8 6 4
♦ K Q 2
♣ 9 8 5 4

SOUTH

Westmount group profile: Men Who Read

Men, beer and heated debate

By LAUREEN SWEENEY

A unique all-men’s book club in Westmount will hold its 20th anniversary meeting this fall as a thriving group that makes a point of really getting down to the meat of the matter.

Characterized by lively and often heavy debate, the group prides itself in its keeping of copious records, ratings of books, spontaneous approach to book selection and strict adherence to its code of discussion.

“None of this talk about the kids and the family that the women get into in their book clubs,” said Bill Smith jestingly to a chorus of laughter and nodding heads at the May meeting. “We usually get into a real heated debate and discussion on the book.”

But make no mistake: There is a time and a place for the socializing. That’s during a relaxed hour at the start of the evening when members pick up on the latest gossip and other worthwhile topics. And it picks up again during a late supper as members take turns hosting the monthly meetings.

Lucky to join

“This is a very exclusive club,” says David Taylor, noting that membership is kept to 10 in accordance to the number of meetings per year. “Yes,” added Antoine Maloney. “I consider myself lucky to have joined six months ago.”

Among some of the former members whose workload conflicted with the meetings are entertainer and Westmount city councillor George Bowser and brewer Peter McAuslan.

What’s the group’s drawing card? “The beer,” someone answers, to more guffaws. “This is like an old-fashioned tavern where men-talk predominates,” stated one. “That’s the fascination.”

But getting back to the reading, books offer an opportunity to satisfy the curiosity that all the members have in common, they explain. And the link is friendship. It’s a men’s night out with an intellectual focus. They all love to read.

No real name

Despite the group’s long history, they’ve actually managed to exist without an official name, which they consider to be of little consequence. When asked to come up with one for an event last year at the Westmount Public Library, they used “Men Who Read”. And they still agree that name pretty much describes who they are and what they’re about.

Members represent a cross-section of professions from CEGEP and university professors to accountants and engineers, “except for doctors – and no lawyers allowed!”

The rules and policies they follow often have ulterior motives. The choice of the next book goes to the host of the next meeting. “That way we’re sure he shows up!” Smith says.

Rating the books

The group takes its discussions so seriously that they rate each book, explains investment advisor Christopher West, a former Westmount resident who drives back from Kingston for each meeting. “We have a very elegant scoring system,” he points out.

With “years of data in spreadsheets,” adds Smith, who recently retired from Dawson College as IT coordinator. “We rate each book on many aspects such as its literary impact. Is this a book for the ages? Or a hot novel today that no one will know about tomorrow?”

Not surprisingly, he and Clive Brewer – the two original members and both systems analysts – also produce lists of almost 200 books that have been read and discussed organized by title, author and selector. The first was Red Wolf, Red Wolf by W.P. Kinsella, dating back to the meeting of October 26, 1988.

Since then, selections have included such classics as Paradise Lost, The Odyssey, Ulysses and Wuthering Heights as well as more recent picks such as The Kite Runner by Khaled Hosseini and the May book Young Trudeau by Max & Monique Nemni.

From class to trash

The range of material is broad: poetry, plays, classic, eclectic “and even trashy fiction.” Among the more memorable books discussed were Nice Work (David Lodge), which captured the angst of the middle aged man in London, and The Remains of the Day (Kazuo Ishiguro) for sheer enjoyment. The group took two months to read and discuss Ulysses, West points out. “That was our crowning glory.” But they lost a member over it.

Nevertheless, while members have come and gone, a core group of about a half a dozen have remained together for many years. They look forward to their night out together, the opportunity to indulge in the true meaning of “argument” and the intellectual satisfaction it provides for “Men Who Read”.
